The full story of the Sherwood Inn reaches back to 1807, when, at the edge of a dense cedar swamp, Isaac Sherwood decided to have a tavern built for the headquarters of his extensive and prosperous stagecoach business. Sherwood, although said to have weighed more than 300 pounds, lived to the ripe old age of 71.

No doubt Sherwood fully partook in the fruits of his labor during his eight years of running the tavern.

Bill Eberhardt purchased the Inn in 1974. In keeping with the Sherwood Inn's nearly two centuries' tradition of public service to travelers and diners, we at the Inn strive to maintain the standards of fine dining and comfortable lodging in attractive surroundings.

Galway Seniors Trip

The play tells the story of the O'Sheas, a cash-challenged, Irish-Catholic family just trying to get through 1973. Linda O'Shea, our 19-year old narrator, is attempting to re-enact for the audience the most turbulent day of her life, her own, very personal Saturday Night Massacre...but her family keeps interrupting, insisting on telling their side of the story. The 1970s was a time of old school living. No Facebook, no tweets, no texting; a time when public ridicule in a close-knit, hermetically sealed Catholic parish was the ultimate nightmare. When Linda's mother leaves it to Linda to tell her younger sister about the birds and the bees, the bawdy conversation is somehow overheard by the parish priest...and Father Lovett is not amused. He sets out to confront the family about "the corruption of their eldest daughter's soul."
